Excerpt: .founded in 1093, were declared by their owner, Earl Robert, to be by him made subject to payment of tithes to the Abbey of St. Werburgh: a fact which appears to substantiate the presumption that without such voluntary act the mills were free. At all events, all mills in existence before the passing of the Act of 9 Edward II., 1316, were by that Act admitted to be free; among them, of course, being the mills of Domesday. The object of the statute was to confine the ex Articuli cieri: emptio to such ancient mills as had enjoyed it: -- If St. 1, c., . any j0 erect on nis own lancl a new mill. an(l after. wards the parson of the same place demandeth tythe for the same, if the king s prohibition is then produced in this form, Quia de tali molendino...
